PREFACE TO PART I

This list aims to cover the best English editions or translations of the dramatic works of these authors, whether published in collections or separately. The annotations and references to critical reviews accompanying the dramas listed are followed by general critical and biographical articles selected from sources in English, and include separate books, periodicals and analytical chapters of books.

Much additional matter and many more of the particular dramas of these authors are to be found in the native tongue in which they write. This is notably true of Hauptmann and Sudermann.

Stoeckius, in his "Naturalism in Modern German Drama," includes a full biographical list of the German material relating to Hauptmann. In the cases of Ibsen and Maeterlinck the number of translated dramas tallies closely with the number of originals. For a fairly complete list of their published plays see Hale's "Dramatists of To-day." The publisher is given for each volume of plays, and in most cases prices are quoted. No abbreviations not immediately intelligible to the user have been included. With few exceptions the books listed have been personally examined by the compiler.

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION OF PART I

The principal changes made in the entries of the first edition, prepared by Mrs. Norton in 1906, have been additional citations of reviews, alternative editions available, and the correction of a few obvious errors.

The general purpose has not been changed and no attempt at completeness or scholarly bias made. A liberal policy of selection has been followed and an attempt made to keep the list fairly to date. More than two hundred additional entries of books, periodical articles and analyticals have been made and more than four hundred additional citations made to reviews. A table of contents and a title index of dramas mentioned have been made. In the sections on criticism, a number of acted but unpublished plays, with critical references, have been noted.

Two new sections, on Henry Arthur Jones and Pinero, permit some comparative study of the "literary drama" of the first edition and the "stage play" as represented in the work of these two prominent English playwrights. As the original notes on these sections were destroyed in the New York State Library fire credit for their present form is largely due to three members of the class of 1911 of the New York State Library School: Mrs. Philip L. Allen and Mr. Sylvester J. Carter, who collected the material on which the present section on Pinero is based, and Miss Ruth F. Eliot who collected that on Henry Arthur Jones.

Title-index of Plays and Operas 89

THE MODERN DRAMA;

ITS TRAITS, TENDENCIES AND TECHNIQUE

Adams, William Davenport, comp. Dictionary of the drama; a guide to the plays, playwrights, players and playhouses of the United Kingdom and America from the earliest times. v. 1. O. Phil., 1904. Lippincott, $3. To be complete in 2 v.

Finds a place here merely as a guidebook to a vast body of varied theatrical publications. Reviewed in Nation, Nov. 17, 1904, 79: 400.

Archer, William. Study and stage, a yearbook of criticism. 250 p. D. Lond., 1899. Richards, 5s.

One year's notes on the stage, written in journalistic style, but level-headed and intelligent in perspective. Mr. Archer is the eminent translator of most of Ibsen's dramas.

Reviewed in Academy, Dec., 1899, 57: 715–16; Saturday Rev., Nov. 18, 1899, 88: 643; Spectator, June 30, 1900, 84: 903.

Baughan, E. A. Literature in drama. Fortnightly Rev. 90: 775–82, Nov., 1908. Same, Living Age, 259: 781–7, Dec. 26, 1908.

Discusses modern literary possibilities of the drama.

Borsa, Mario. English stage of today; tr. by Selwyn Brinton. O. Lond., 1908. Lane, $2.50.

Discusses most of the present prominent dramatists in an interesting, scholarly fashion.

Reviewed in Academy, Dec. 14, 1907, 73: 250; Athenæum, Feb. 15, 1908, 1: 204; Dial, Apr. 16, 1908, 44: 248; Independent, May 7, 1908, 64: 1039; Nation, Dec. 26, 1907, 85: 594; Putnam's, May, 1908, 4: 234.

Clarence, Reginald. "The Stage" cyclopedia; a bibliography of plays. 503 p. O. Lond. 1909. "The Stage." 10s. 6d.

"An alphabetical list of plays and other stage pieces of which any record can be found since the commencement of the English Stage, together with descriptions, authors' names, dates and places of production."

Chiefly useful in tracing, through titles and dates of production, criticisms and descriptive articles not recorded in the ordinary periodical index and for the frequent references to sources and adaptations.

Clapp, Henry Austin. Reminiscences of a dramatic critic, with an essay on the art of Henry Irving. 241 p. O. Bost., 1902. Houghton, $1.75.

The American stage during the last thirty years. His criticisms are full of taste and penetration. Spectator.

Colby, Frank Moore. Adventures of a play-goer. (See his Imaginary obligations. 1904. p. 118–66.)

Colton, Arthur. Drama and the play. (See North American Rev., Jan., 1911, 193: 72–82.)

Comparison of the "literary drama" and "the stage play."

Courtney, William Leonard. Modern social drama as influenced by the novel. (See Fortnightly Rev., 1902, 77: 666–74.)

A lecture delivered in Feb., 1902, at the Birmingham and Midland Institute. Mr. Courtney is editor of the Fortnightly Review and is prominent as a dramatic critic.

Eaton, Walter Prichard. At the New Theatre and others; the American stage: its problems and performances. 359 p. O. Bost., 1910. Small, $1.50 net.

"Survey of the American stage during the two seasons of 1908–10. A sound but slightly biased account of the theatrical syndicate is followed by a discussion of the virtues and defects of the New Theatre, criticism of the plays produced there and at other New York theatres, and a number of dramatic essays." A. L. A. Book List.

Reviewed in Nation, Nov. 24, 1910, 91: 505; N. Y. Times, Nov. 12, 1910, 15: 630.

Faguet, Emile. The symbolical drama. (See International Mo., Dec., 1903, 8: 329–41.)

A member of the French Academy gives definite ideas as to the existence of symbolism in the different dramas of Ibsen and Maeterlinck.

Faxon, Frederick Winthrop. Dramatic Index, 1909-10. Boston Book Co. 2 v. sq. O. 1910-11. $3.50 each.

Annual cumulation, with additions, of the quarterly lists in the Bulletin of Bibliography. Also forms Part II of the annual Magazine Subject-Index. (Boston Book Co., $5.50 per vol.) Includes references to periodical articles relating to dramatic authors, criticisms, plots, portraits, and dramatic illustrations.

Filon, Pierre Marie Augustin. The English stage; being an account of the Victorian drama; tr. from the French by Frederic Whyte, with an introduction by H. A. Jones. 319 p. O. N. Y., 1897. Dodd, $2.50.

Appeared first in Revue des deux mondes. Includes summaries, criticisms and prophecies, with chapters on Pinero and Ibsen.

Reviewed in Westminster Rev., Feb., 1897, 147: 151-5, by Stoddard Dewey.

Fiske, Mrs. Minnie Maddern. Matter of the play. (See International Mo., 1902, 5: 629–44.)

Concerned with the stage interpretation of the problem play.

Francke, Kuno. History of German literature as determined by social forces. Ed. 4. 595 p. O. N. Y., 1901. Holt, $2.50.

An enlargement of his Social Forces in German Literature to include a treatment of contemporary German drama. A scholarly work summing up the complex forces in modern German society, but not always just in criticizing the details of the different dramas.

Freytag, Gustav. Technique of the drama; an exposition of the dramatic composition and art . . . tr. from the 6th German ed. by E. J. MacEwan. Ed. 3. 395 p. D. Chic., 1900. Scott, Foresman, $1.50.

One of the best-known general discussions of the subject. Needs supplementing with later material but still one of the familiar references in college courses.

Gaffney, Fannie Humphreys. Modern dramatic realism. (See Arena, Apr., 1903, 29: 391–6.)

Greenslet, Ferris. Theory of the drama. (See Forum, July, 1899, 27: 631–40.)

A thoughtful discussion of dramatic pleasure and its source.

Hale, Edward Everett, Jr. Dramatists of today: Rostand, Hauptmann, Sudermann, Pinero, Shaw, Phillips, Maeterlinck; being an informal discussion of their significant work. 236 p. D. N. Y., 1905. Holt, $1.50.

"Essays reprinted partly from the Dial, dealing mainly with continental plays seen on the American stage. Of lighter weight and narrower scope than Huneker's Iconoclasts. Temperate, conservative, readable, reliable." A chatty and entertaining book for the general reader to consult first, but one which he may safely neglect for the further study of any particular author. The bibliographic lists add to its value as a popular guide.

Reviewed in Atlantic Mo., June, 1905, 95: 842; Nation, July 6, 1905, 81: 14; Outlook, May 13, 1905, 80: 138; Dial, May 16, 1905, 38: 357; Critic, July, 1905, 47: 90.

Hamilton, Clayton Meeker. Theory of the theatre and other principles of dramatic criticism. 251 p. D. N. Y., 1910. Holt, $1.50.

"Papers that illustrate certain steady principles of dramatic criticism." Bk. Rev. Digest.

"A live book, tho not a permanent one." Independent.

Reviewed in Bookman, May, 1910, 31: 301; Dial, June 16, 1910, 48: 420; Independent, Sept. 1, 1910, 69: 484; Nation, May 19, 1910, 90: 518; Review of Reviews, June, 1910, 41: 768.

Hapgood, Norman. Stage in America, 1897–1900. 408 p. D. N. Y., 1901. Macmillan, $1.75.

Discusses the syndicate, theatrical conditions, prevailing types of plays, prominent actors, plays and dramatists. "Even those who are unable to agree unreservedly with his precepts and conclusions will appreciate the vigor and general intelligence of his convictions and his comprehension of the fundamental principles upon which the theatre must be conducted if it is to demonstrate its right to be considered an art."

Reviewed in Bookman, 13: 241; Nation, 72: 401; Dial, 30: 335; Spectator, May, 1901, 1: 704; Literature, 8: 465; Critic, 41: 129.

—— Theory of dramatic criticism. (See Forum, Mar., 1899, 27: 120.)

A plea for more breadth of mind in our dramatic critics, disparaging those who prudishly moralize upon the evils of the stage and remain blind to the art of the play and to its social mission.

Henderson, Archibald. Evolution of dramatic technique. (See North American Rev., Mar., 1909, 189: 428–44.)

The drama is not stationary in form but progressive in development.

Hennequin, Alfred. Art of playwriting; being a practical treatise on the elements of dramatic construction, intended for the playwright, the student and the dramatic critic. 187 p. D. Bost., c1890. Houghton, $1.25.

Has the faults of similar manuals, but includes some fairly good analyses of dramatic art in general.

Herrmann, Oscar. Living dramatists: Pinero, Ibsen, D'Annunzio; introduction by W. W. Massee. O. N. Y., 1905. Brentano, $5 net.

Hogg, Wentworth. Guide to selecting plays. 190 p. D. N. Y., 1910. S. French, paper, 25c.

"It has not been my intention to write any critical remarks . . . my sole desire being to give . . . a concise summary of the plot, the number and nature of the characters and some idea of the necessary scenery." Preface.

Huneker, James Gibbons. Iconoclasts, a book of dramatists: Ibsen, Strindberg, Becque, Hauptmann, Sudermann, Hervieu, Gorky, Duse and D'Annunzio, Maeterlinck and Bernard Shaw. 430 p. O. N. Y., 1905. Scribner, $1.50 net.

Brilliant and original characterizations of the symbolistic and revolutionary dramatists. The subjects of the essays correspond closely to those included in this bibliography. Stimulating, broadening in judgment, and pre-supposing some knowledge of the matter criticized. "What one misses in his work is repose and finish and a careful avoidance of too general observations."

The greater part of the foregoing essays, now completely revised, first appeared in the New York Sun. They also appeared in single numbers in The Lamp.

Reviewed in Athenæum, August, 1905, 2: 284; Atlantic, Mo., June, 1905, 95: 841, by H. W. Boynton; Dial, May 16, 1905, 38: 357; Outlook, May 13, 1905, 80: 140.

Jerome, Jerome K. Problem of the problem play. (See Harper's Weekly, Dec. 10, 1904, 48: 1916–18.)

Kerr, S. P. What are immoral plays? (See Westminster Rev., Apr., 1901, 155: 444–50.)

Answer to Allan Laidlaw's What are immoral plays? challenging his theory and presenting a more solid and tempered argument.

Laidlaw, Allan. Drama on the downward grade, 1868–1898. (See Westminster Rev., Mar., 1900, 153: 317–23.)

Scattered remarks to prove that one form of drama is degenerating and giving place to a form of a higher kind.

—— What are immoral plays? (See Westminster Rev., Aug., 1900, 154: 212–16.)

Answers the question in an original but fantastic manner. The argument, in the somewhat difficult case of art or morals, is against repression of these plays on the stage. A sounder statement is found in S. P. Kerr's article in Westminster Rev., 153: 444–50.

McCracken, Elizabeth. The play and the gallery. (See Atlantic Mo., 89: 497–507.)

The effect of the theatre upon the social and moral standards of the tenements.

Published also in the Outlook, May, 1902, 71: 169–78.

Mackaye, Percy Wallace. Playhouse and the play, and other addresses concerning the theatre and democracy in America. 210 p. D. N. Y., 1909. Macmillan, $1.25.

Five essays by a rising young American play-writer, dealing generally with the significance of the theatre in American civic life.

Reviewed in Independent, July 8, 1909, 67: 93, Nation, May 6, 1909, 88: 469; Review of Reviews, June, 1909, 39: 767.

Maeterlinck, Maurice. The modern drama. (See his The double garden. D. 1904. N. Y. Dodd, $1.40.)

Marked by distinction of style and freshness of vision. Suggestive if not convincing.

An article under the same title, translated by Alfred Sutro, appeared in the Cornhill Mag., Aug., 1899, 80: 166–73.

—— Of our anxious morality. (See Fortnightly Rev., Jan., 1906, 85: 46–61.)

Translated by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos.

Manager vs. critic. (See Everybody's July, 1909, 21: 119–30.)

Discussion of manager's attitude toward frank criticism. Critic's side by H. Davis; manager's, by P. Armstrong.

Matthews, Brander. Development of the drama. 351 p. D. N. Y., 1903. Scribner, $1.25 net.

Mr. Matthews is a playwright and a critic of distinction who writes with charm, sincerity and effect.

Reviewed in Nation, Oct. 29, 1903, 77: 346–7; Lamp, Nov., 1903, 27: 329–32.

—— Inquiries and opinions. 305 p. D. N. Y., 1907. Scribner, $1.25.

Includes Apology for technic (p. 51–71); Modern novel and the modern play (p. 181–204); Literary merit of our latter-day drama (p. 207–25); Ibsen the playwright (p. 229–79); Art of the stage-manager (p. 283–305).

—— Makers of drama of today. (See Atlantic Mo., Apr., 1903, 91: 504–12.)

Historical sketch of dramatic progress during the nineteenth century. Mr. Matthews is distinguished as a critic of French drama.

—— Revival of the poetic drama. (See Atlantic Mo., Feb., 1908, 101: 219–24.)

The poetic play must be dramatic as well as poetic.

—— Study of the drama. 320 p. D. Bost., 1910, Houghton, $1.50.

"A study of the technic of the drama. It is intended, not for those who want to write plays, but for those who wish to learn how plays are written now and how they were written in the past. . . . In other words, this study is devoted mainly to an examination of the structural framework which the great dramatists of various epochs have given to their plays; and it discusses only incidentally the psychology, the philosophy and the poetry which we now admire in these pieces." Preface.

Reviewed in Athenæum, July 2, 1910, 2: 23; Bookman, Apr. 1910, 31: 183; Dial, Apr. 16, 1910, 48: 268; Educational Rev. Apr., 1910, 39: 422; Sept., 1910, 40: 207; Forum, May, 1910, 43: 558; Literary Digest, Apr. 2, 1910, 40: 658; Nation, Apr. 14, 1910, 90: 382; Review of Reviews, June, 1910, 41: 768.

Merington, Marguerite. What constitutes a play? (See North American Rev., Dec., 1902, 175: 863–70.)

"That the persons of the play, under extraordinary conditions, shall produce on an audience the effect of human nature, is the touchstone of the playwright's art."

(The) play once more. (See Outlook, Feb. 4, 1911, 97: 258–60.)

Discusses the recent revival of the drama as a popular literary form.

Potter, Helen. The drama of the twentieth century. (See Arena, Feb., 1900, 23: 157–66.)

A rambling attempt to show the evolution toward the realization of a new idea — that of a "conditioned stage with a conditioned audience."

Price, William T. Technique of the drama; a statement of the principles involved in the value of dramatic material, in the construction of plays and in dramatic criticism. 287 p. D. N. Y., 1897. Brentano, $1.50.

Scott, Clement. Drama of yesterday and today. 2 v. O. Lond., 1899. Macmillan, $7.

"Result of forty years' keen observation, enthusiastic and competent. Valuable especially as a history of the stage, and for its chronicle of plays in the appendix. Its repetition, gossip and needless bulk detract from its readable interest."

Reviewed in Athenæum, Dec. 23, 1899: 874–5.

Scott, Clement. Two dramatic revolutions. (See North American Rev., 157: 476–84.)

A non-Puritanic and violent attack on Ibsen's Ghosts and the Second Mrs. Tanqueray, decrying their pessimism and irreverence and the "art that makes evil good upon the stage." Mr. Scott is dramatic critic for the Daily Telegraph.

Shaw, George Bernard. Dramatic opinions and essays; containing . . . a word on the dramatic opinions and essays of G. Bernard Shaw, by James Huneker. 2 v. D. N. Y., 1906. Brentano, $2.50 net.

Criticisms of Ibsen, Sudermann and Rostand are scattered through this collection, made up of the papers contributed by Mr. Shaw in his capacity as dramatic critic to the London Saturday Review, 1895–98.

Strang, Lewis C. Plays and players of the last quarter of a century. 2v. D. N. Y. (?), 1903.

Concise sketches of the leading actors and dramatists and their work. The criticism is usually sound, but is from the point of view of the stage, rather than of the literary critic.

Symons, Arthur. Plays, acting and music. D. N. Y., 1903. Dutton, $2 net.

"Leader and follower of the school of symbolists, Mr. Symons with true critical gifts here uncovers the veil of mysticism that hangs about them." The book is mainly concerned with the continental drama. Clearly defined individual views about the artistic features of the drama are expressed in beautiful prose.

Reviewed in Saturday Rev., 96: 360; Academy, Sept. 19, 1903, 65: 261; Athenæum, Dec., 1903: 762; Dial, 37: 62.

Tree, Herbert Beerbohm. Some aspects of the drama of today. (See North American Rev., Jan., 1897, 164: 66–74.)

A critical outline of the essentials of the art of the stage. Of value because Mr. Tree is himself an actor-manager.

Walkley, Arthur Bingham. Drama and life. 331 p. D. N. Y., 1908. Brentano, $1.75.

Essays and critiques chiefly on recent dramatists and actors and dramatic technique reprinted from the Edinburgh Review and London Times.

Reviewed in Forum, Apr., 1908, 39: 550–60 and North American Rev., May, 1908, 187: 777, by F. M. Colby; Athenæum, Feb., 1908, 1: 140; Nation, May 28, 1908, 86: 496.

—— Dramatic criticism; three lectures delivered at the Royal Institution, Feb., 1903. 125 p. D. Lond., 1903. Murray, 5s net.

These lectures on The Ideal Spectator, The Dramatic Critic, Old and New Criticism, dealing with stage criticism in the main, are lucid and reliable.

—— Playhouse impressions. D. Lond., 1892. Unwin. o. p.

Reprints from London periodicals on modern actors and dramatists including Ibsen, Dumas, Sardou, Daudet, H. A. Jones, Pinero, etc. Readable and reliable.

Wedmore, Frederick. Literature and the theatre. (See Nineteenth Century, Apr., 1902, 51: 568–80.)

Claims that the two can be divorced. Studies of Pinero, Becque and Hervieu incidentally made in comparing the English and French stage.

West, Kenyon. Dramatic criticism. (See Era, July, 1903, 12: 39–44.)

On the ideal dramatic critic and playwright and their responsibilities in interpreting the public taste.

Witkowski, George. German drama of the nineteenth century; authorized translation from the 2d German ed. by L. E. Horning. 230 p. D. N. Y., 1909. Holt, $1.

"Nothing at the same time so comprehensive and terse has appeared on the subject." N. Y. Times.

Reviewed in Educational Rev., Sept., 1909, 38: 205; Forum, Sept., 1909, 42: 282; Independent, Sept. 23, 1909, 67: 709.

Woodbridge, Elisabeth. The drama, its laws and its technique. 181 p. D. Bost., 1898. Allyn, 80c. net.

Founded on Freytag's Technique of the Drama adapted to modern American use. Contains a good, short bibliography. A. L. A. Catalog, 1904, p. 181.

Annunzio, Gabriele d'. Daughter of Jorio, a pastoral tragedy; tr. by Charlotte Porter, Pietro Isola and Alice Henry; with an introduction by Miss Porter. 51+208 p. D. Bost., 1907. Little, $1.50.

Published also by Badger, Bost., 1911, $1.50.

"Presents with intense human touches a picture of patriarchal peasant life." Bk. Rev. Digest.

Reviewed in Outlook, Jan. 18, 1908, 88: 142; Review of Reviews, Feb., 1908, 37: 255; Poet-lore, 1908, 19: 111–19, by Pietro Isola.

—— (The) dead city: a tragedy, rendered into English by G. Mantellini; illustrated from the stage productions of Eleonora Duse. 282 p. D. Chic., 1902. Laird, $1.25.

"A sympathetic and admirable translation." William Sharp.

Action takes place in Greece on the plain of Argolis. The play, a strange introduction of the fatality of the Greek tragedy on the modern stage, has been received with almost equal praise and censure. Morbid, vitiated, gloomy and overwrought in description, it is beautiful in its original phrasing and construction.

Reviewed in Academy, June 2, 1900, 58: 464–6; Saturday Rev., Sept. 22, 1900, 90: 366; Dial, Jan. 1, 1903, 34: 8–9, by H. D. Sedgwick, Jr.; Critic, Dec., 1902, 41: 574–5.

—— (The) dream of an autumn sunset; tr. from the Italian by Anna Schenck. (See Poet-lore, Jan.–Mar., 1904, 15: 6–29.)

The setting of this one-act, one-scene play is picturesquely described "as a domain of a patrician of Venice, on the bank of the Brenta." Lurid, violent and unremittingly hysterical, it is the opposite extreme of the beautiful dreaminess of his Spring Morning.

—— Dream of a spring morning; a play; tr. from the Italian by Anna Schenck. (See Poet-lore, 1902, 14: 6–36.)

A long, one-act play in five scenes. The argument is much the same as that of Romeo and Juliet, a morbid motive of Isabella's madness and hysterical passion worked out with delicate and exquisite pathos and promising dramatic possibilities.

—— Francesca da Rimini; tr. by Arthur Symons. 223 p. D. N. Y., c1902. Stokes, $1.

In an introductory analysis the translator says, "This play is more than a tragedy of two lovers, it is a study of an age of blood in the 13th century in Italy." The long, beautifully told story, with its luxurious descriptions, symbolic color and allusion, is developed with more conciseness and delicate reserve than the author has shown in any other of his dramas yet translated.

Reviewed in Kuhns, L. O., Great poets of Italy, 1903, p. 331–9; Walkley, A. B., Drama and Life, 1908, p. 255–9; Arena, Feb., 1908, 39: 144–8, by A. Annunzio, Gabriele d'. Gioconda; tr. by Arthur Symons. 144 p. D. N. Y., 1902. Russell, $1.

Has been received in the Italian theatres as one of the most remarkable plays of modern Italian drama. The author's quick eye for all shades of force, strangeness, magic and delight, make it a tragedy of great beauty and power. The character analysis in Silvia reveals a strong woman's soul. The motive — the contest between the life of art and the everyday life of home — is so bold in treatment and development as not to allure the average reader or listener. Its constructive fault is its excess of dialogue over movement.

Reveals the mind and soul of a wretched little orphan who, just before her death, lapses into a delirium in which she sees in fantastic action all the visions of her unhappy life and her "himmelfahrt" beyond. By means of a delicate art that feels for simple words, makes the emotions bound, and colors and vivifies all it touches, Hauptmann carries us into this atmosphere of dreamland where Hannele is soaring and makes us see the same visions in realistic shape and plan. This dream poem is his most characteristic work, but has met with no stage success outside of German theatres.

—— Lonely lives: a drama; tr. from the German by Mary Morison. 179 p. D. Lond., 1898. Heinemann, 2s. 6d.

Unmistakably Ibsenian in the very close analogy it bears to Rosmersholm; with the same sets of problematic characters battling with the same matters of religion and science, and the same ill-defined bounds of platonic liberty, yet drawn in shapes that are more human, true and appealing. The psychology of the play has little that is convincing. The moral tells us that we cannot lift ourselves ethically above our age. Some critics have claimed for its simple plot the best construction of all modern stage plays.

A perfect fairy-drama that might delight a child. The same art that in Hannele blended the real with the ideal, the natural with the supernatural, the physical with the spiritual, is here even more highly idealized.

Its fancies and images spring from primitive nature, whose woodland elves, sprites and fairies appear in every shape of subtle charm and weirdest mystery. Heinrich, the bell-founder, is a mediæval mystic, who is striving to satisfy his restless soul with an artistic ideal of real worth and purity. These fairy figures stand for the influences of nature that seek to drag the artist-man down from the heights to the level of his lower instincts. A masterpiece that shows all of Hauptmann's many tendencies in dramatic art, as beautiful to see as it is to read.

The author here takes as his theme the rebellion of the Silesian flax-weavers in 1860. Their hungry eyes, bowed necks and wretched want are pictured with keenest pathos and unrelieved gloom of the sort that makes this play a remarkable judgment of man's cruelty to his fellow-beings. Hauptmann's characteristic failure to work out logically the reformer's ideas that he can set forth dramatically with such brilliant effects is to be deplored. Technically the play lacks continuity of scene, and has no hero or spokesman other than as one exists abstractly in the hunger of the masses.

Shows Ibsen on his highest plane of dramatic work. It is an unsparing scourge of Norway's half-heartedness in its pursuit of national and Christian ideals. While so intensely national it also has universal application in that it advocates self-realization regardless of the sacrifice involved. The language and thought are stern and solemn, symbolic and impressive.

Ibsen, Henrik. (A) Doll's house.

A moral essay calling for more equality in marriage. Nora, who furnishes the example of the customary sacrifice of woman's individuality, is one of the most distinctive of Ibsen's characters.

The plot has evidently been seized for the mere joy of its adaptability for a dramatic picture and for the play it has given the artist in painting each person in his own individuality. Considered otherwise there is little excuse for a problem so impossible and for whose evils there is agreed to be little remedy.

His largest work, consisting of two five-act epic-dramas, "Cæsar's Apostasy" and "Emperor Julian." Boyesen says, "It is looser in construction than any subsequent dramas and is occasionally even a trifle prolix in its discussions. Moreover, the wealth of philosophic thought keeps both critics and the public much in the dark as to its real meaning."

The hero, Dr. Stockholm, simply tells the truth he has discovered in regard to the corruption of some mineral waters that have brought visitors and prosperity to a little town in Norway. "The strongest man is he who stands most alone" is a quotation which reveals Ibsen's opinion that civilization is a detriment to individual character. The drama is clever, powerful and impressive, and has found much favor on the stage.

—— Feast at Solhaug.

A short, historical drama, one of Ibsen's early works. "The theme is fate's disentanglement of a young knight from the net wound round him by the first fancy he has aroused in a woman's heart. . . . The play is young, it affects the senses like youthful, emotional music and youthful experiences must lie behind it." Brandes' "Ibsen," p. 92–3.

Anatole France says, "If the will of those who are no more is to be imposed upon those who still are, it is the dead who live, and the live men who become the dead ones." Such an idea of heredity is the motive of this painfully wrought and intensely revolutionary play. It is significant in the way it preserves the unity of time, concentrating into a single day the culminating point of an action that has been going on for years.

Amid the wealth of symbolism in this play whose every line has a subtle significance, Ibsen symbolizes his own gloomy style in the action of Hedda when she has the curtain drawn to exclude the sunlight. It is the sunless side of things that one sees in this as in all his plays. The plot develops with precision and force while the characters pursue their destinies in such wise as might the eyeless fish in a subterranean cavern.

In spite of its obscure symbolism this drama is full of the most poetic fancy. It deals with the old theme that only through law are won the ideals, freedom and happiness, a theme developed in the main by the use of most commonplace and vulgar actualities.

"A mixture of psychology and poetic fancy surrounding one of Ibsen's haunting principles — that an action is only valuable and reasonable if it be the spontaneous outcome of the individual will. . . . The theme of the play . . . is the psychological development of an idle woman who has nothing particular to occupy her life. R. F. Sharp.

—— Lady Inger of Ostrat.

An historic melodrama with a gloomy castle, spectral pictures and secret passages that make a setting distinctly Maeterlinckian. There are in addition shifting conspiracies, distorted characters and constant mystery. The outworn expedient of much soliloquy to convey information is here used to an excess that we find in a few of his social dramas. An improbable plot but an actable play, produced in 1855.

—— League of youth.

Published also by W. H. Baker. Bost., 1900. paper. 25 c. under title Young men's league, tr. by Henry Carstarphen.

The stinging satire upon democracy interests American readers. Ibsen's feelings, though here they are rarely well moderated, are clearly cast with the figure Bratsberg, who, in league with the past, looks askance upon the struggles and motives of Norway's political parties. The play excels in easy dialogue and the grasp the author has upon the several characters.

Represents the spectacle of a handful of people all making the worst of everything. Ibsen's characteristic use of suggestion is here carried to an extreme, but it contributes to the strong atmospheric effect which is the most marked feature of the play. Mystery and the secret ways of fate form the æsthetic basis of the theme, and the difficult feat is accomplished of presenting horror in the sunshine. A loveless marriage is the problem.

Ibsen, Henrik. Love's comedy.

Published also by Scribner, N. Y., 1900. $1.40. Tr. by C. H. Herford, William Archer and Edmund Gosse.

The scene is laid in a fashionable pension in the suburbs of Christiania. The theme is a defense of rational marriage as opposed to a marriage of inclination. This first of the three great satiric dramas in verse has much lyrical beauty and force, but slight dramatic interest, due to its burden of philosophy and the tedious movement. George Brandes and P. H. Wicksteed among critics have each met its puzzles in interesting argument. This is a brilliant translation to which is added a valuable critical estimate.

Brandes writes, "This is a play that echoes and re-echoes in our minds long after we have read it. . . . Great is its art, profound and rich is its symbolic language. . . . Ibsen's intention is to give us by means of real characters, but in half-allegorical form, the tragedy of a great ambitious artist whose ideals can never be realized even though he is successful."

—— Peer Gynt.

A masterpiece of poetic drama; a piece of world-literature into whose lines one can read new and ever new meanings, and even his own meanings that please him best.

The typical Norseman is satirized in the hero, a man of dreams and idle in action; a cynically indifferent, selfish ne'er-do-weel, who, like Brand, pursues a motto "to be himself," but does it in contrast by giving Self its wildest satisfaction. The heroine, Solveig, drawn in perfect antithesis to the hero, is most appealing. Prominent critics disagree as to whether the ethical problem has or has not been solved in the romantic ending. Peer Gynt's own lively wit and imagination add charm and distinct vitality.

—— Pillars of society.

Published also by W. H. Baker. Bost. paper. 25c.

An attack upon the hypocrisy and snobbishness of Consul Bernick, local magnate of a provincial Norwegian town. He may be said to typify the merchant-class supporters of a community, who are lined up like whited sepulchres. The plot is simple and the art grim, yet there is dramatic interest in the swift action, biting sarcasm and skilful grouping of incidents.

Ibsen, Henrik. The Pretenders.

The theme is the struggle for the vacant throne of Sverre in the romantic epoch of the thirteenth century in Norwegian history. Boyesen calls it "highly impressive as an acting drama; written with true dramatic instinct which concentrates the action and dispenses with all superfluous dialogue. It shows Ibsen's familiarity with the stage both as stage manager and artistic director."

—— Rosmersholm.

Several characters of the savage, free, northern type dreamily aspire to moral liberty. The subtle psychology of the problem enshrouds the reader with perplexity. So slight are the incidents and details and so bare the chance of an actor's right interpretation of such strangely real and unreal people that the drama may well be reserved for mere closet reading.

—— When we dead awaken; a dramatic epilogue in 3 acts.

This last of Ibsen's great prose dramas has a familiar motive closely related to the artist's career in The Master Builder "Life without love, even the most artistic, is to be counted as death," and about the sculptor Rubek is drawn a drastic picture of the kind of death that life without love assuredly is. A play of engaging interest and masterly work. Better for reading than for acting.

This wild drake kept in a garret in a tamed state is the image of a man born to liberty, but condemned by accidents of civilization and the acquired weakness of his nature to live in servitude and darkness. Considered dramatically there is masterly character drawing, but an unhappy mixture of satire and tragedy as well as a lack of skill in effecting climaxes.

"In technical skill the play is his masterpiece; indeed, it would be difficult to name any modern drama that is its superior in construction, characterization, and absolute naturalness and aptness of dialogue. . . . The only weak point in the play lies in the 'symbolism' of the Wild Duck itself." R. F. Sharp.

A modern wrestle with the old story of Platonic friendship. Aglavaine, a highminded and cultured girl, shares the love of the husband of Sélysette, the sweet self-belittling child-wife. In the half-spiritual motives, overcome in the end by jealousy and tragedy, and in the unusually lengthy monologues of these three deep-souled characters, who love the joys of silence and all things ill-fitted to the conventions of real living, Maeterlinck has expressed many of his own views of life and love. A drama to be loved because of its gentle pathos and soul-revelations rather than for its real dramatic significance.

—— Alladine and Palomides.

A love drama in which all the moods, the naively childish characters and the bare little externals of plot and movement resemble Pélléas and Mélisande. It is a revelation of the hidden life. "Mere words have no meaning" and whatever one sees of outward things about the play seems vague and far removed from actual existence.

Published also under title The sightless, tr. by Sir Laurence Alma Tadema. Lond. W. Scott. O. 1s. (Scott library.)

A one-act, one-scene play, in which a group of blind men helplessly grope about in a cavern-like forest place, seeking in vain for their guide, a priest who is already dead. It symbolizes a world of people lost in the darkness of unfaith and uncertain where to fasten their reason. The story is simply told by the picture on the stage which the words of the blind men explain without further action. One feels the artist's touch throughout in the atmosphere and suggestion.

—— Death of Tintagiles.

Published also separately by Gowans and Gray. Lond. D. paper. 6d. (Tr. by Alfred Sutro.)

In this attempt to typify the struggle of human affection against death, the scene is fittingly laid in the remote realm of an ugly, mysterious Queen who pursues with undying hatred the child Tintagiles, heir to her throne. Though the setting is remote and unreal the theme is developed with truthfulness to life and dramatic power.

The dramatic make-up of this slight little play is closely fashioned after that of The blind and The intruder, hence it is unusual and unconventional — a play of situations and dramatic suggestiveness in which the interest centers in the rescuers of a drowned girl, who loiter outside and pityingly watch, through the closed shutters of a window, the little family group to whom they must break the painful news.

—— (The) Intruder.

Artful in its beautiful execution and in the subtle hold it has upon the attention, this play needs only to be read aloud to reveal its dramatic effectiveness. The invisible intruder is Death. The action centers in the death of a sick woman who does not appear at all in the play. Meanwhile a family group sit about a waning lamp and converse in a homely, realistic way. The symbolism, atmosphere and the use of simple, poetic words make one feel the awful presence of Death. It represents his most characteristic work in drama.

The scene is laid at Pisa at the close of the 15th century when Pisa, as an ally of Venice, was besieged by the Florentines. The motive is the heroism of a pure-minded woman who sacrifices herself for the city, and discovers the difference between the love and perfect trust of her captor and the cruelty and jealousy shown by her husband. Without being a masterpiece or possessing any great dramatic power it abounds in imagination and delicate literary touches. The translation is good.

Old forgotten castles, haunted forests and mysterious black pools make a romantic setting for this modern revision of the historic Da Rimini story. The characters are dim and confused, more abstract than vital, and hidden meanings crowd each scene, yet the play is suggestive of life in its passion and profound dramatic truth.

Savage and violent love and tragedy. Terror is the keynote that fills the air about the murky palace, its hideous royalty and the unfortunate Maleine. The action has little sequence. A fateful, mysterious, shuddering mood grows more and more tense till a ridiculously cyclonic climax is reached. Many commentators refer to it as a "Shakespeare anthology" by reason of its marked likeness to various parts of Hamlet, Macbeth and Lear.

A romantic story with some poetical quality, showing the playwright's pronounced originality and independence. The setting is not to be placed in any particular locality, but is the ever-dilapidated castle of most of his plays and an old king and queen who typify the past. Finely earnest scenes follow weak and flabby ones in an unsatisfactory way; sometimes tragical, sometimes ridiculous, and with an amusing repetition of phrase. While the play gives no impression of preaching a moral lesson there is, lurking back of every line and incident, a hidden meaning suggesting greater and deeper things.

Published also by G. Allen. Lond., 1902. D. 3s. 6d.

A simple, unforced translation, the former in blank verse, the latter in irregular rhymed verse. Sister Beatrice is slight, without the subtlety of meaning or the strangeness of atmosphere that are characteristic of most of the author's work.

Mr. Hale describes Ariane and Barbe Bleue as a sort of commentary on Maeterlinck by reason of its subjectively explanatory nature. "Truth is not found in the beaten path of humanity but in the secret depths of the soul where it is locked by the force of worldly authority, convention, tradition and prudery." This doctrine is exemplified in Ariane, when she insists that of all the keys that Bluebeard has given her, the only one of value is the forbidden one.

—— Paolo and Francesca; a tragedy in four acts. 120 p. D. Lond., 1903. Lane, $1.50.

"A rarely beautiful poem which is at the same time a fairly good acting drama, based on the story of Paolo and Francesca as told by Dante. It combines in a remarkable way the simplicity, unity and restraint of the Greek drama with the passion and color of modern dramatic art. The whole is instinct with the utmost purity and delicacy of feeling. It unquestionably places Mr. Phillips in the first rank of modern dramatists and modern poets." Saturday Review.

—— Preserving Mr. Panmure; a comic play in four acts. 137 p. D. Lond., 1910. Chiswick Press.

Pinero's latest production. Excellent in its stage-craft but perilously near bad taste in parts. The setting, like all of Pinero's later work, involves much social vulgarity.

—— (The) rocket; an original comedy in three acts. 80 p. D. N. Y. 1905. S. French, 50c.

A rascally old "Chevalier" attempts to get a wealthy husband for his pretended daughter. Her real father, long missing, returns, proves his relationship and the Chevalier's dreams of wealth come down like a rocket. Farce of the broadest and most extravagant kind, but does not transgress the bounds of good taste.

Shaw, George Bernard. Arms and the man.

Scene is laid in a Bulgarian mountain hotel in 1885. "Amusingly iconoclastic with Mr. Shaw's notion of conventional heroism as its target."

For review of comic opera The Chocolate Soldier (by M. Bernauer and I. Jacobson with music by O. Strauss) founded on Arms and the man, see Academy, Sept. 17, 1910, 79: 278; Illustrated London News, Sept. 17, 1910, 137: 410; Saturday Rev., Sept. 17, 1910, 110: 355.

—— Cæsar and Cleopatra.

Setting is on the Syrian border of Egypt toward the end of the 23d dynasty. A study of antiquity, humorous and truth-telling, and tending to be both real and fantastic.

—— Candida.

A comedy of more depth than others of the "mere plays" in the "plays pleasant." The characterization is varied. The clergyman and Candida herself are particularly true studies, the former being the exponent of Christian socialist idealism.

Reviewed in Walkley, A. B., Drama and life. 1908. p. 214–18; London Times, Apr. 30, 1904, p. 133; Athenæum, Apr. 30, 1904, 1: 570; Academy, May 7, 1904, 66: 528.

—— Captain Brassbound's conversion.

The author claims to have stolen "the scenery, atmosphere and knowledge of the East" from Cunningham Grahame's Morocco the Most Holy. A farce so bound to tickle the humor of the reader that he forgets to be dissatisfied with its cynicism.

—— The devil's disciple.

Published also separately by Constable, Lond., 1906. 88 p. D. 2s.

In the preface, "On Diabolian ethics," the author refers to this as "the novelty of the advanced thought of my day — a play certain to be written at the end of the nineteenth century." It has some tragic situations mingled with malicious, roistering humor.

—— Doctor's dilemma.

A satire on the medical profession. Various types of doctors, old-school, new-school, surgeons and quacks serve to show the confusion of medical science.

—— How he lied to her husband.

"Admittedly a jeux d'esprit, this barefaced and indubitably 'original' little farce is as preposterously veracious and as immensely telling as anything that he has done, trifle though it is; and it is full . . . of vivid and irresistible divinations of character." Laurence Gilman.

—— John Bull's other island.

The action arises from the opposition of English and Irish types and conditions. Both nations are impartially treated both as to their merits and their weaknesses. Shows complete contempt of conventional dramatic technique.

Shaw, George Bernard. Man of destiny.

An original one-act complication in which Napoleon, leading the French army into Italy in 1796, quarters himself at a little inn and at a Milanese repast carries on a very engrossing dialogue with "The Lady." Shaw makes Napoleon a mouthpiece with which he lectures Englishmen in his own whimsical fashion.

—— Major Barbara.

The central figure is a girl of good family who has become an officer in the Salvation Army without losing touch with her relatives. The most extreme theories of social reform are thrown together in one confused jumble.

"As a study of actual social conditions or as drama quite worthless . . . but entertaining, paradoxical and irresponsible."

Reviewed in Walkley, A. B., Drama and life, 1908. p., 233–8; Current Literature, Feb., 1906, 40: 191–3; Aug., 1907, 43: 193–8; Nation, July 4, 1907, 84: 19; Saturday Rev., Aug. 28, 1909, 108: 254.

—— Mrs. Warren's profession.

Based on the Socialists' plea that the necessary result of poverty is vice. Unpleasant as are all the convincing arguments to those who would rather shut their eyes and ears than be convinced and convicted, it is nevertheless made entertaining by the charm of the characters. Frank, "the good-for-nothing," is especially delightful. Structurally the interest is held by the brilliancy of the dialogue rather than by action, and surprise is substituted for climax.

—— (The) Philanderer.

This play points out the fact that certain usages of society are being outgrown — for instance, marriage in its present form. But as no practical substitute is suggested, the point is weakened. It loses prominence also through the development of the humorous situations wherein lies the chief merit of the play. Incidental is a subtle attack on vivisection. As a whole it is slightly tragic and very amusing.

—— Shewing up of Blanco Posnet.

A moral conflict between Posnet and the Almighty in which Posnet is brought to see God's purposes in the suffering and mental agony he has undergone. "Forbidden by the censor in England, because it was considered blasphemous and immoral."

Reviewed in Forum, Mar., 1911, 45: 334–54; Saturday Rev., Aug. 28, 1909, 108: 254.

—— Widowers' houses.

Middle class respectability and younger son gentility fattening on the poverty of the slum as flies fatten on filth," is the way Shaw puts it. His own feeling on the subject is so strong that his irony becomes too bitter to be entertaining and the didactic trend encumbers the dramatic power with the result that the whole is rather ineffectual. The characters are nearly all "villains" and are treated in an unnatural and old-fashioned style.

—— You never can tell.

A successful comedy with a theme that is both droll and complex, but realistically developed. The characters make but a feeble impression, except perhaps that of an elderly waiter who, in the farcical ending, dances through the hotel rooms with a young lady who is saucy, pert and in some ways delightful.

Sudermann, Hermann. Fires of St. John, a drama in four acts; tr. and adapted by Charles Swickard. 139 p. O. Bost., 1904. Luce, $1.25.

An old German peasant custom of lighting bonfires and dancing around them on St. John's eve is used as an allegorical background for this romantic drama. The custom symbolizes "the outburst in the human soul, after Christian centuries, of the wild yearnings and primeval passions of unregenerate man." One follows the plot with the feeling that it is an unsatisfactory play with a conclusion that is unforgivable.

A tragedy of great dramatic and religious interest. The Jewish prophet, in struggling for a Christ ideal too visionary and austere for his human followers, becomes disenchanted with himself and tragically falls. In the fall he awakens to his weak hold on the power of Love. The Gospel story is enlarged to show the psychological purpose of the play. There is lack of unity in the whole and the main lines are commonplace and conventional.

The well-drawn characters typify the Berlinese aristocracy who live in an environment wholly political. The truthful art of the author brings his message and psychology before our minds brutally "as it is."

He would have us see that there are personalities — such as the one typified in the high-minded Beata — so big that they can beg reasons for transcending moral laws. The point of the title is the proposal of a "Toast to life" by the guilty Beata herself at the moment when her own self-inflicted death is near. The fine workmanship of the play and the opportunities it offers for artistic interpretation have given it great stage success.

Pre-eminently a study of character and environment, offering, in the characters of Schwartze and his outcast daughter Magda, a contrast between provincial and cosmopolitan ideals, the petty narrowness of the one and the irresponsible lawlessness of the other. Distinctly popular essays indicating, in a way adapted to readers who have little first-hand information, the chief aspects of the work of Sudermann, Hauptmann and some minor women writers. The critic, while not great, is always sensible and genuinely interested and interesting. He shows his high estimate of the two great dramatists in an unduly favorable and somewhat too detailed analysis of their plays, arranged in chronological order.

Reviewed in Athenæum, Nov. 18, 1905, 2: 685; Poet-lore, Sept., 1905, 16: 127–8.

Jones, Dora M. Plays of Hermann Sudermann. (See Westminster Rev., Nov., 1900, 154: 553–60.)

A general characterization, slight in substance and value.

Lee, Elizabeth. German drama of to-day. (See Living Age, 234, 156-66.)

Discussion of Hauptmann and Sudermann as representatives of modern German drama.

Meyer, Edward Stockton. Modern German drama. (See Critic, July, 1905, 47: 61–70.)

Treats of the features of German naturalism as developed in Sudermann and Hauptmann.

Meyer, Richard M. Hermann Sudermann. (See International Mo., 1902, 6: 140–54.)

Biographical and critical. Fair and to the point.

Phelps, William Lyon. Hermann Sudermann. (See his Essays on modern novelists. 1910. Macmillan, $1.50. p. 132–58.)

Discusses Sudermann's fiction rather than his dramas.

Steiner, Edward A. Two German dramatists. (See Outlook, Jan. 5, 1901, 67: 74–7.)

Based on personal visits to Sudermann and Hauptmann, and condensed into a brief analysis of a few stage plays.

Strang, Lewis C. Sudermann and Maeterlinck. (See his Players and plays of the last quarter century. 1903. v. 2. p. 259–71.)

A concise biographical and critical sketch.

Wells, Benjamin Willis. Hermann Sudermann. (See Forum, Nov., 1898, 26: 374–84.)

A biographical and critical sketch of Sudermann by the author of "Modern German Literature." Of the plays mentioned in this list Mr. Wells considers two — Magda and Johannes (John the Baptist).

Witkowski, Georg. Hermann Sudermann. (See his German drama of the nineteenth century. 1909. p. 152–61.)

Treats especially of Sudermann's skill in stage technique.
